Canned Heat have always pursued a spirited synthesis of Boogie Blues Rock Music, with a nod to psychedelia, whilst championing the great bluesmen who influenced them so much. They formed in 1965, and in that era played both the Monterey and Woodstock Rock Festivals. Their driving force was Alan "Blind Owl" Wilson (vocals, harmonica, guitar), and Bob "The Bear" Hite (vocals). They both were obsessed with the blues, and each had legendary Blues record collections, from which they drew much of the material that became Canned Heat hits. They championed black blues at a time when it was not popular in the white community, and along with John Mayall, Paul Butterfield and the Rolling Stones did much to bring it to prominence.

Their biggest hits were On The Road Again and Going Up The Country.

This recording contains many of their finest moments, both live and in the studio, and features their original lineup of Al Wilson, Bob Hite, Henry Vestine (guitar), Larry Taylor (Bass) and Frank Cook (Drums), as well as Cook's replacement Adolpho de la Parra.

This recording is one of Aim's
Best Of Rock, Best Of Blues,
Best Of Soul, Best Of Reggae series.
