WASTED DAYS & WASTED NIGHTS

AIM 3007 CD

Freddy Fender was a regional artist working around Texas for 20 years before he had two runaway hits in 1975, "Before The Next Teardrop Falls" (No 1 Country & No 1 Top Twenty Charts), then "Wasted Days & Wasted Nights" (No 1 Country & No 8 Top Twenty Charts). Before that time Fender, who was born Baldemar Huerta in San Benito, Texas on June 4, 1937, had received some success with Spanish-English versions of Elvis Presley songs in Mexico in 1957, and had sold a stack of copies of the original recording of "Wasted Days & Wasted Nights", in 1959 which was a large regional seller in the Southwest.

"Crazy, Crazy, Baby" was his next release and was starting to become a moderate hit when Fender was busted for possessing two marijuana joints in 1960, in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and subsequently spent three years in the notorious Angola State Prison.

Fast forwarding to 1975, Fenders third release in his hit run "Since I Met You Baby" also charted going to number one on the Country charts and Top 50 on the Main charts. His fourth hit of 1975 was "Secret Love". In 1976 "The Wild Side of Life" went Top 15 Country, followed by "You'll Lose A Good Thing" which went to No 15 Country and to No 40 in the Main chart. Other hits included "The Rains Came" in 1977. In 1990 he became part of the Texas Super Group "The Texas Tornados" with Doug Sahm, Augie Meyers and Flaco Jiminez.
